Introduction

Abstract

Roomy is an app that can help people find roommates easier. With this new app, discovering people of similar age, hobbies and life styles in users' area that are looking for roommates or are looking for a room to rent! This app is the match.com of finding roommates, users will have to fill out some information about himself/herself and will be matched with local people looking to share a home with a similar user. Start by telling us a little about yourself and who you're looking for. We will use the information to help you find a great roommate to match your lifestyle and to help the right people find you. Once users have found a potential roommate, they will be able to message one another in our IM messenger. This app will be able to notify users when a match has been made and if there is a message waiting for him/her. This app is different because it is a quick and easy way to find a roommate that you can live with, we all have had those roommates where we didn't really know them before we moved in and eventually finding out their habits and interests for better or for worse, we are trying to make living with roommates fun and easy and not dreadful or stressful.

Audience

Our initial target audience was college students, but, after our beta version, the product's audience will be anyone 18 and older who is looking for a roommate(s) who meets their living standards.

Technical Limitations

For the user to be able to use our app, they will need a smart phone with internet access. Technical limitations on the production side of the app include a secure data base and a compatibility program to make the matches safe and easy for our users.

Research

Preliminary research design

To start our process, we created surveys for our classmates, peers, and fellow students to help us answer what type of information they would like to know about a potential roommate before they would choose to live with him or her. These online and offline surveys helped us figure out the key demographic we were looking to offer our product to, which is basically the ages of 18 and older. It also helped us narrow down the most important questions to ask our users when creating their initial roommate profiles. At the end of the surveys, we asked if we can contact the volunteers again, and we have emailed those who say yes a few more open-ended questions to help our research. Once we had our first version of the product we used our participatory research to show us users' initial responses and helped guide us into making a fully developed product. Finally, we corrected our errors based on the information we gather based on the viewers' reactions and finalized the product.

Findings from the Research

We conducted an online survey, which we posted on Facebook, for our initial research. We had 73 responses. We found from the survey that 51% of the people who took it reported that they have had issues in the past with finding roommates, whereas 49% reported not having past issues. When asked, "What kind of relationship are you looking for with your potential roommate?" 51% were looking to be friends, 42% were looking to respectfully and peacefully coexist, 5% wanted to do everything together, and 1% selected other.

People taking the survey filled out a checklist of things they would like to know about future roommates:
95% checked cleanliness (in common space)
93% checked age and gender
92% checked smoking habits
84% checked social habits
81% checked rent price limits
78% checked pets
70% checked sleep habits/morning or night person
78% checked shared or private room
77% checked drinking habits

73% checked noise level
74% checked criminal history
68% checked location she/he would like to live in
66% checked number of roommates
60% checked cooking/eating habits
60% checked significant others
51% checked hobbies
41% checked language(s)
41% occupation
33% checked conflict resolution skills.

We also asked, "Is there any other information you would like to know about a potential roommate?" We received nine responses. Two were irrelevant, but the others are as followed: How food is to be decided in the fridge (if everyone shares food or if everyone has their own)? When he/she is looking to get a room by, maybe references? College level? Major? Do they play an instrument? Do they shower in the morning or evening ? Are they a homebody or always out and about? Do they make enough money to cover the bills? What do the bills usually run? Why is the roommate looking for a place like this? Their willingness for casual sexual activity and swinger games, music taste. We received eight email addresses that we can contact later for more questions.

Personas

Stacy: A 19 year old student at A & M Texas University from Sunnyville, California who just finished her first year studying business. She lived her first year in the dorms with one roommate, Jen, who Stacy had a bad relationship with. Jen was messy, always out, never around to bond with her and not considerate of Stacy. Stacy is now trying to find a nice house in a neighborhood within 20 miles of campus with two roommates she can be friends with and enjoy living with. She is looking for tidy and clean roommates as well as people who wants to hang out at home and adventure with her.

Jack: A 24 year old student at Cuesta Community College originally from Stockton, California. He lives in a house off foothill in San Luis Obispo and needs a roommate because one of his roommates is leaving after they have all signed the lease. Jack works and goes to community college. He wants a roommate that can pay rent on time and that isn't allergic to animals because he has a dog and a cat. He would also prefer a nonsmoker because he just quit. He has four other roommates already in the house that all work and go to community college who stay busy but also have a very active social life and drink together as a group.

Jeffrey: A 33 year old man working at the post office in Mission Beach, San Diego originally from Maine. Jeff moved to get a little California sunshine. Jeff is currently living in an apartment complex that has just switched ownership and since raised the rent price and he can't afford it anymore. He wants to find an apartment close to his job in town that is affordable because he bikes to work and lives on a budget. He is looking for an older mature and self-sufficient roommate. He wants his roommate to be quiet, does their own "thing" and is early to bed since Jeff has to wake up early every morning for work and is a light sleeper. Jeffrey is also allergic to nuts so he would prefer a roommate who doesn't cook with nuts.

Goals

The goal is to easily find a good roommate. This goal is performed by optimizing the search process by properly matching potential roommates based on the criteria that the potential roommates input. This criteria is based off information that each user entered. For example, the user's cleanliness, age and gender, smoking habits, desired roommate relationship, etc.

Usability Analysis

We held usability tests and had nine people test the first draft of our app layout. We had the testers complete tasks like create a profile to help match you to a potential roommate and and to message and like/dislike another's profile. The first and third testers didn't have any questions or comments about the app, but they thoroughly read through each of the questions in the profile creation and they did not need to spend a lot of time on each frame. The second tester struggled to find her way through the app's layout because not all of the wireframes were completed and linked yet, so a few parts we not clickable yet. The fourth, fifth, and sixth testers all figured out the layout and functionality of the app very quickly and said that it was "easy to use". The seventh tester had a slow start, but after having his questions answered he stated that our app is "useful" and a "great idea". The eighth tester read almost every line on each of the frames and commented that he liked it. The ninth tester skipped the first task and logged into the home page instead of creating a profile and then she easily navigated the remainder of the layout.

Usability Analysis Limitations

When creating Roomy's prototype, we used Flinto. Because of the technical limitations we have with the website, we aren't able to accurate portray one feature of Roomy. When selecting a potential roommate's profile from the Home page or one of the lists of profiles, the prototype continues straight to that selected profile. In the fully functioning version of Roomy, the user has two options when viewing a selected profile. The user can quickly tap the profile photo of a potential roommate, which takes them to the select profile (like the prototype). Or the user can hold their touch on the selected profile for a moment and a box will appear displaying the actions and their corresponding icons Like, Dislike, Message, and Return. This second option allows a quicker experience when a user is sorting through roommate options.

Hey. How's it going?
It's good. How are you doing?
Doing good as well, saw you need a room, want to check out mine?
Sure, what's your address?

Hey. Read your profile. You seem like a cool person. Are you interested in meeting up to talk to each other?
Sounds like a good idea. You seem cool. Where and when should we meet?
What's you number?

About Us
Who We Are
Launched on an iOS application on November 17th 2014, Roomy helped pioneer the roommate finding industry. Three Cal Poly students; Kael Hauptmann, Shauna Jellison, and Rachel Leonard, came up with the concept for a class assignment for a web design project under the professor Bruno Ribeiro. We create opportunities so people in need of a roommate or a room are more likely to find someone they can live happily with in their circumstance. Over Roomy's development, we've learned more and more about what people want—and the tools they need to help take the lottery out of roommate or room finding. With more ways than ever to bring roommates together, we've come a long way since it's beginning ideas.
What We Do
Our mission is simple: to help roommates find the kind of person they're looking for to fill a room or to help someone in need of a room to live in, find people or someone compatible with them. And we think we're pretty good at it.

Future Enhancements

Currently our application is only designed to allow someone to search for a room or search for a roommate, but we would like to expand this to encompass more. We want people to be able to post houses for rent, and we want realtors to be able to posts houses for rent as well.
